

GLU

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain deaking; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss.

Precious couches full oft are shaked with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Sidney, b. i.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best. Mason's Mech. Exer.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue'd many friends to thee. Shakespeare, H.VI.
Who teacheth a fool is as one that *glue*th a potter together. Ecclus. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Darham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those waps in a honeypot are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange, Fable 126.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson's Sermons.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUE-BOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One, whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutis, Lat. to swallow; γλῦζω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to faze; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dry.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden's State of Innocence.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot's Art of Politic Living.

5. To saturate.

The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange, Fable 11.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage.
Woodward's Natural History.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutinosus, French, from gluten, Latin.]
Gluey; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 900.

Next this marble venom'd feat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Boyle.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glutton, French, from glutis, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
When the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught. Prior.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Graville.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton;
to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their gluttonous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Thou well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton's Par. Lost.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, Fr. from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantic stone. Milton's Par. Lost.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juven.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; and the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUTY. adj. [from glue.]

2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

GLU

GNO

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a glue (spurious matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

With glue wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very glue or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; glann, ghyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.]

A hollow between two mountains.

And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare, R. II.

The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke, a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks. Knotty.

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt Split'st the unweildgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure.

To GNASH. v. a. [knaghen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.

The fear, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
Rowl'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

To GNASH. v. n.
